Water the Elixir of Life

Quality water is an important factor in optimum health, yet most people are unsure as to which water is best for daily use, so let us evaluate water quality based solely upon its origin of access.

Distilled water

Though much of the distilled water used today is through machinery distillation, a valuable source of distilled water is actually rainwater, because through electrolysis water taken up and distilled. However, collecting quality rainwater from a clean unpolluted environment is quite challenging and there must be done with caution and some filtration after rainwater has been collected. Distilled water can be used regularly for cooking, bathing, watering plants, and drinking without any problems.

Distilled water is also known not to have any minerals in it based upon the distillation process, but distilled water act as a magnet to bind toxic metals and substances in the body and eliminating them.

Spring water

Spring water is commonly located as running streams of many types and varieties on the surface of the earth and can be used regularly with some filtration provided that the source is quality. This form of water must be from natural spring and not manmade rivers or streams, this form of water may also contain higher mineral content as well.

Alkaline Water

Alkaline water is a new and popular product on the market today gaining much popularity, however to much alkaline water usage will create a buildup of organic material in the body and clog arteries and other bio ducts throughout the body. Alkaline water is natural and is found in mountainous regions of the world where snow caps predominant melting at certain times of the year.

Well Water

Well water is commonly found deep in the earth also known as underground water tributaries; this type of water is usually very high in mineral content which may damage teeth and health. Well water use often requires filtration and softening with certain chemicals and should be filtered with a high-quality filtration system for daily use.

Municipal Water

This water is commonly known as tap water or from the faucet, and should be avoided regarding cooking, drinking, and bathing if possible as it contains lots of chemicals.

Hydrotherapy Healing Properties

Water therapy is also an important factor for optimum health which must be integrated into ones daily healthy life style regimen, a full account of hydrotherapy practices are listed according to use and availability.

Facial Steam

Facial hydrotherapy involves the traditional pot of boiling hot distilled water placed on a table adding several drops of your favorite all natural essential oil into the boiling water, and with a towel, cover your head and hold over the pot and steam your face in several sessions.

Benefits

- → Clear skin
- ★ Respiratory cleansing
- ★ Skin pores opening and releasing toxins
- → Use a Skin Brush on dry skin to remove dead cells, also use while showering and bathing

Hot & Cold Showers

By taking hot and cold time managed showers, activate the immune system as well as oscillation of body organs, circulation, muscle contraction, and much more. Simply start with a hot shower for seven minutes as hot as you take it followed by a cold shower as cold as you take it. Do these seven times total, then dry off and apply a moisturizer to your entire body and do stretches afterwards.

Benefits

- → Activate Full Immune System
- → Activate Organ Revitalization
- → Increase blood circulation
- → Liver and Spleen Boost of Cellular Production
- → Increase eliminatory system function

Steam Room/Sauna

Full body steaming has so many benefits I need not list them all here, however every part of your body will certainly benefit from a full body steam, and in many cases will increase your life span which must be healthy overall.
